

LINEVITCH FOR WAR TO BITTER END

He Believes that He Can Defeat The Japanese Armies in Manchuria.

READY TO TAKE AGGRESSIVE.

Has Full Confidence as to the Outcome of the Approaching Battle.

Headquarters of the Russian Army, Golyandani, Manchuria, June 6.—Undismayed by the Japanese defeat and full of confidence as to the outcome of the approaching battle, Lieut.-Gen. Linevitch is for war to the bitter end, and he believes that the Russian army is now strong enough to assume the aggressive.

To a question put to him by the correspondent of the Associated Press, to whom he granted an interview today, as to whether he was for peace or war, the commander-in-chief replied firmly and without the slightest hesitation: "Most certainly I am for war. I am a soldier. The emperor's will is, naturally, my law; but my voice now, and before, is for the continuance of the fight."

With the destruction of our fleet, of course, the hopes of those who at the beginning of the war wished to make peace at Tokyo; but our defeat at sea has not interfered with my plans—absolutely not one whit. I consider myself strong enough not only to hold my ground, but even to advance. I am no prophet and have no desire to be one, but I firmly believe that I can and will defeat the Japanese in Manchuria.

I have asked the war office to send me recruits of the youngest classes instead of older ones, not because the latter make poor soldiers, but because, with plenty of young and vigorous recruits, it would be unjust as well as inadvisable to call the older men from their more settled life."

MELLIN'S For the Baby FOOD

You may be thinking of using an artificial food for your baby. Try Mellin's Food; it is a proper food suited to the baby's condition. It is not a medicine but a true food. Let us send you a sample to try.

Mellin's Food is the ONLY Infants' Food, which received the Grand Prize, the highest award of the London, Manchester and Glasgow Exhibition, 1904. Highest Gold Medal.

MELLIN'S FOOD CO., BOSTON, MASS.

The Associated Press correspondent informed that reports have been received at army headquarters from Vladivostok indicating that the naval defeat was due largely to lack of leadership after the Russian fleet was routed. The engagement having been carried on practically without signals after the first hour, and no attempt being made to adapt the movements of the fleet to meet the maneuvers of the Japanese. Nobody on board any vessel in the fleet was in the secret as to the Russian plan, the commander-in-chief's only confidant having been Rear Admiral Volkensam, who died early in the fight.

Up to the time of the battle, these reports say, fortune favored the Russians, there being almost no sick in the hospitals and all the ships being in good condition.

No one in the fleet cherished any illusions. At the most it was hoped that enough vessels would reach Vladivostok to threaten Japan's absolute control of the sea, and to make the Japanese pay as dearly as possible for every ship lost. The hopes of the Russian fleet went no further than this.

The Russian ships had enough coal to reach Vladivostok, but there was an inadequate supply of shells and ammunition for a prolonged battle.

Acute Rheumatism.

Deep tearing or wrenching pains, occasioned by getting wet through, worse when at rest, or on first moving the limbs and in the joints, is cured quickly by Ballard's Snow Liniment. One-fourth ounce, diluted with water, rubbed with a pain in my back. It soon got so bad I could not bend over. One bottle of Ballard's Snow Liniment cured me. Sold by Z. C. M. L. Drug Dept.

You can do a Saturday baking with Husler's Flour.

And then go to Sallaire in the afternoon. "Baking day" spelled "Easy day."

JOHN "SAT IT OUT."

While Prof. George E. Vincent of the University of Chicago addressed the Chicago Women's Aid yesterday afternoon on "The Psychology of Democracy," his son, John, aged 11 years, who had been promised a bicycle when the lecture was done, impatiently "sat it out."

On a rear seat, where he wriggled uneasily, John Vincent was witness that his father was a model without honor so far as he was concerned. The boy held a watch on the latter when the latter, with effective earnestness, said:

"Society is held together by sentiment. It is that which guides the great mass of people, and the test of moral insight is the ability to decide by intuition the right and wrong of any proposition. Therefore says:

But John Vincent was not waiting to hear what Vincent elder said; he was waiting in the vestibule.

"Going to buy me a bicycle now," he told a sympathetic woman, "and I guess listening to him talk I earned it."

Chicago Tribune.

Hardie's Utah Reservation Township Map and Guide, 15 cents each, at book stores or $14.80, 2nd West St.

THE NEWS IN LOS ANGELES

The Deseret News will be found on sale in Los Angeles at the Standard News Company, 414 South Main street.

EXCURSION TO LOGAN

June 8th.

Via Oregon Short Line. Round trip only $2.50. Special train leaves Salt Lake 8:30 a. m., returning leaves Logan at 9:30 p. m. June 15th. Tickets good for return on regular trains of the R. V. Aspinwall United Continental Travelers. City Ticket Office 201 Main St.

PEACE PROSPECTS GROWING BRIGHTER

Some of the Czar's Closest and Most Influential Advisers Are Favoring It.

DECISION RESTS WITH HIM.

Pending that Decision, President and European Ambassadors Will Preserve Silence.

St. Petersburg, June 7, 8 a. m.—Beyond the statement that the advisability of confiding the opening of peace negotiations to President Roosevelt, in the event that Emperor Nicholas shall decide that the time has arrived to indicate to Japan Russia's desire to end the struggle, no definite statement can be made at this hour regarding the result of Foreign Minister Lansdorp's audience with the emperor on the subject of Count Cassini's dispatch communicating the practical tender of good offices.

It can, however, be stated in addition that Grand Duke Alexander Michailovitch, the emperor's brother-in-law, who undoubtedly exercises a greater personal influence with his majesty than any other members of the imperial family, and who until the disaster to the Russian fleet was the most prominent advocate of war to the last ditch, has joined Grand Duke Vladimir, uncle of the emperor, in counseling this conclusion of peace.

Grand Duke Vladimir, at a recent family council, while urging the utility of continuing the struggle, stoutly maintained that the loss of Manchuria, and even of a portion of eastern Siberia, would not mean the ruin of Russia's prestige, but that she could continue to grow and prosper.

Just as Great Britain did after the loss of her American colonies.

Another important convert made by the advocates of peace is Admiral Alexieff. With Grand Duke Alexander Michailovitch, Grand Duke Vladimir and Admiral Alexieff on the side of peace, the backbone of what has been denominated the war party seems to be broken. Nevertheless the final word rests with the emperor himself.

SILENCE THE POLICY.

Washington, June 6.—Pending the decision of the czar regarding war or peace in the far east the president and the European ambassadors with whom he is daily conferring, have agreed that silence regarding their activities is necessary, and word to this effect has been passed along lest Russia take offense and go contrary to what the neutral powers believe to be for her own advantage.

Count Cassini, the Russian ambassador, remains without advice from St. Petersburg that throw any light on the probable policy of the czar. The ambassador has not yet received an acknowledgment of his long cablegram of last week regarding his conference with the president. The cablegram was sent not for the purpose of transmitting any message to the czar, but, acting on his own initiative, the ambassador made a beautiful report of what was described at the time as an "informal and general conversation."

No formal tender of mediation was made, nor was any reported. The ambassador, however, felt that his government should be informed of the views expressed by the president in favor of peace, and therefore incorporated them in his cablegram. It is expected that later on the Russian embassy here will be informed whether the result of the battle in the Sea of Japan has affected the determination of the St. Petersburg government to continue the war. Any information on this subject will be promptly placed before the president.

Peace talk was temporarily supplanted in diplomatic circles today by comment upon the resignation of M. Delcasse and the developments in the Moroccan situation. It is believed here, however, that the effect of the retirement of the distinguished diplomatist will not be to increase the opportunity of the president and the ambassadors at Washington in their efforts toward peace negotiations.

Greenet I suppose you are very conscientious in your book reviews? I make it a point never to read a book I am reviewing for fear I may find something in it to bias my judgment. Boston Transcript.

TEA

This is a coffee country; not tea; but we drink a good deal of tea, and good tea too.

Your grocer returns your money if you don't like Belling's Tea.

SANE OR INSANE?

"Is there any sure test by which to tell the sane from the insane?" Inquired a student of the famous French alienist Esquirol. "Passez dine with me tomorrow at 6 o'clock," was the answer of the savant. The student complied. Two other guests were present, one of whom was elegantly dressed and apparently highly educated, while the other was rather uncouth, noisy and extremely conceited. After dinner the pupil rose to take a leave, and as he shook hands with his teacher he remarked:

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

marked: "The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."

"In some line, but the latter is as certainly a lunatic as the former is sane," replied Esquirol with a smile. "The quiet, well-dressed man who takes so rationally has for years labored under the delusion that he is God, the Father; whereas, the other man, whose exuberance and self-conceit have surprised you, is a Honore de Blans, the greatest French writer of the day."—Dr. Stephen Smith in Leslie's Magazine.

"The problem is very simple after all; the quiet, well-dressed gentleman is certainly distinct from the noisy, uncouth fellow."